How did you prepare yourself for the AGP?

The combination of my theoretical and practical backgrounds prepared me well for the AGP – having experience on a professional as well as academic level proved to be very useful. Furthermore, I did a summer internship in Malaysia just before joining PwC. I was therefore used to working with different nationalities in a new environment.

What do you expect to gain from this programme?

As the programme offers the opportunity to work in several different business units, I expect to find out where I would like to work in the future. Moreover, the programme gives me the opportunity to be actively engaged in interesting client projects as well as the long-term assignment. The latter is another advantage of the AGP. The long-term assignment is an internal project, which lasts one year. Currently Tobias and I are part of a diversified team, which gives us the opportunity to meet and work with people from different lines of services. Building up a network of internal and external contacts is certainly a key advantage of the AGP.
