What made you choose the AGP?

I chose PwC's Advisory Graduate Programme as it offers me the opportunity to gain extensive project experience in a range of different areas across Advisory within the first two years. The programme thus offers a very steep learning curve and great networking opportunities, as well as providing the ideal platform from which to launch my career. The fact that I would be able to work abroad for six months was also a key factor in my decision to apply for the programme.

What are the biggest challenges you have faced so far, and where have you been able to experience a real sense of achievement?

The rotations during the programme demand a lot of you – you have to become acquainted with different areas in a very short space of time. My first project involved providing support during the sale of an industrial company, while my second project involves implementing risk-management processes at a major bank. Each project and each client present very different challenges, which makes the working environment very dynamic. I was quickly able to take on tasks for which I was given a great deal of responsibility within my project team.
